Task 1.Read the text and decide if each sentence 1-10 is TRUE or FALSE.

The history of leather jacket

We think we look so cool, so modern and just a little rebellious in our jeans, white T-shirt and black leather jacket. But we're not as original as we think we are – this look goes back to the 1970s, right? Well, no, not exactly – as a matter of fact, you can trace most of it back to 100 years ago.

Take the white T-shirt and leather jacket. Both started life in the military. The T-shirt (so-called because of its shape like a T) was in fact underwear. In the American Navy, it was worn under a uniform. Until the early 20th century, underwear was woolen, but a revolution in textile production produced cotton jersey, a fast-drying fabric which fits tightly to the body and kept sailors warm. The short-sleeved T-shirt was born. Leather jackets were worn by fighter pilots in the First World War – they were hard-wearing, warm and fur-lined for maximum protection from the elements. Then, in 1928, an American raincoat company, Schott, designed the first leather motorcycle jacket with a zip. By the 1950s both garments had reached iconic status when famous actors like Marlon Brando and James Dean wore them in films. Later, in the 1960s and 1970s, bands from the Beatles to the Ramones adopted the leather jacket, and it moved from motorcycle sports to teenage rebellion. In the 1970s T-shirts got a colorful update: brightly-colored T-shirts were particularly popular as well as T-shirts with band logos and political slogans. Having started out as an undergarment for men, T-shirts became unisex in the 1970s and have been part of everyone's wardrobe since then. You may think your fashionably distressed jeans are cutting-edge fashion items, but they can be traced even further back in history. In the 1800s denim, the material jeans are made of, was a kind of cotton made in Nîmes, France ('de Nîmes'). The first blue denim trousers were worn by sailors in Genoa – 'Gênes' in French. 'Bleu de Gênes' became 'blue jeans'. Blue jeans as we know them originated during the 1849 Californian Gold Rush. They were developed by German storekeeper Levi Strauss and Latvian tailor Jacob Davis. Levi Strauss never wore a pair of jeans himself – he was a wealthy businessman, and jeans were only worn by manual workers and cowboys. But then their popularity spread after the Second World War. Young people started wearing jeans to imitate young Hollywood stars. However, they were associated with rebellious behavior and were banned in schools.

So each time you wear your jeans, white T-shirt and black leather jacket, you're actually wearing 100 years of style history! The secret to their long life? They're comfortable, multi-purpose clothes made of natural materials that are easy to wear, keep you warm and give you a little attitude. What's not to love?

1) Leather jacket and T-shirts took a beginning in the military.
2) T-shirt is called like this because of its collar.
3) The T-shirt was woolen because they continued to use the same fabric as before.
4) The main reason of revolution in textile was to keep people warm.
5) By 1950's was designed first leather jacket with a zip.
6) Famous celebrities such as Marlon Brando and James Dean popularized clothes.
7) T-shirts were worn by both men and women by 1800th.

8) The first distressed jeans were first made recently.
9) Jeans were initially manufactured for wealthy people.
10) The jeans were worn by youngsters to look like famous stars.

Task 2. Read the text. Complete gaps 11–16 with sentences A–F.

Paying it forward

In today's cynical world, it's often difficult to give and accept kindness. The smallest acts of kindness are often met with suspicion, and yet there is plenty of evidence to suggest that being kind can make you healthier and happier.

So what sort of acts of kindness am I talking about? 11._____ At one end of the scale, an anonymous person might pay for someone's expensive operation without expecting a thank-you. At the other, there are the small gestures which might seem trivial, but are often extremely welcome.

One example of this is the story of a twelve-year-old boy who found a stranger's phone on a train. When he contacted the owner, she was so impressed by his honesty, that she offered a small reward. 12._____ In the note he said that he didn't want the money, he just wanted the woman to do something nice for someone else.

This kind of gesture is known as 'paying it forward'. The idea is that if you do a good deed for someone but ask for nothing in return, they will then do a good deed for someone else, and kindness will multiply and create a huge wave of good feeling across the globe.

13._____. Giving to others can make you feel more connected to other people and increase your sense of purpose in life. You feel you've made a difference and there's a reason to get out of bed in the morning. Taking time to help others may even protect you from disease. A thirty-year study has shown that women who volunteered for a charity were sixteen percent less likely to suffer a major illness during that period – perhaps because it lowers stress levels.

I believe that people are naturally kind. This was also the conclusion of a study by Michael Norton at Harvard Business School: he did research in more than 130 countries and found that people who spend a bigger proportion of their income on others were more fulfilled than those who spend it on themselves. 14._____.

That's the theory anyway. But when I've tried out acts of kindness on strangers, they often seem unsure how to react to me. In my local coffee shop, I tried to give away a cup of coffee.15. _____. Then I realized why this was happening: we don't expect kindness from strangers – on the contrary, we expect them to trick us or take advantage of us.

16._____. I did find someone to take my coffee and when I saw how pleased she was, it made my day. We need to fight against the 'me-first' society we live in and start a kindness movement. It sounds cheesy, but I think we need it.

A) I thought people would be delighted, but instead I was met with suspicious stares
B) There are many benefits to being kind
C) They can be big gestures, or just small everyday things that will make people smile
D) He didn't accept the money, but he wrote a note and sent it with the returned phone
E) But don't let that put you off
F) He thinks the desire to give and share could be a basic human trait.

Read the article again. For questions 17–20, choose the correct answer, A, B, or C.

17. The kind of gesture that is known as 'paying it forward' means
    A. Doing something good with expectations of it being returned
    B. Doing something good for the sake of kindness

C. Doing something good because you will get paid

18. According to the text, the research suggested that women who volunteered for a charity were less likely to
    A. Go bankrupt
    B. Be lonely
    C. Fall ill
19. According to another study, done by Michael Norton, people were more fulfilled because
    A. They gave a large sum of their earnings to others
    B. They told others about the benefits of kind acts
    C. They started facing their fears
20. The author of the text tried to do something good which was
    A. Getting a cup of free coffee for a stranger
    B. Finding a lost phone and refusing a reward for it
    C. Paying anonymously for someone's expensive operation
